Association of the United States Army Symposium

“Information Technology as the Change Agent for Transformation”

May 31–June 1, 2001

Hilton Long Beach
Long Beach, California

Objective and Scope

The Association of the United States Army (AUSA), in conjunction with the United States Army Director of Information Systems for Command, Control, Communications and Computers, the United States Army Space and Missile Defense Command, and the United States Army War College will present a symposium entitled, “Information Technology as the Change Agent for Transformation.” The symposium will focus on how advances in information technology (IT) will affect different battlefield functional environments, especially the impact of IT on Command and Control, Intelligence, and Space Operations. Panel topics will cover a broad range of areas impacted by advances in IT: information security, leadership, training, doctrine, simulation, force development, and web-based logistics.

Timely and accurate information is more a factor in the successful application of force than ever before. Commanders at every level need the ability to collect, process, and disseminate an uninterrupted flow of data, while exploiting or denying an adversary’s ability to do the same, providing information superiority. The criticality of processing and fusing data within our command and control systems is among the top priorities for any defense program. These Command, Control, Communications, Computers and Intelligence systems are the nerves and blood necessary for information dominance in the battlespace of the future. All of these systems rely on the rapidly advancing information technologies.

Information Technologies combine together numerous scientific disciplines: computer sciences, physics, chemistry, human machine interaction, and psychology, all of which contribute to how we exchange information. This effects not only the battlespace, but extends to the way we educate, administrate and operate our Army. Conquering our information battles is just the beginning of the challenge, transforming our Army to a Knowledge-Based Organization is the ultimate goal.

This symposium seeks to provide a dynamic opportunity for senior leaders in government, industry and academia to take stock of recent achievements and advances in the application of “Information Technology as the Change Agent for Transformation.” We look forward to seeing you there.

The Institute of Creative Technology (ICT) Tour

Wednesday, May 30

The ICT’s mission is to enlist the resources and talents of the entertainment and game development industries and work collaboratively with computer scientists to advance the state of immersive training simulation.

Your visit to the ICT will feature several demonstrations that showcase the immersive technology currently being researched.

You will be immersed in a virtual reality demonstration of a Medevac Mission in Bosnia- - Don't miss it!

Attendance on this tour is limited and on a first come basis. To sign up, indicate your preferred time on the registration form. To avoid disappointment, please list 2nd and 3rd choices. A nominal fee of $15 covers the cost of transportation.

Guest Tour

Getty Museum

Thursday, May 31

Spend the day at the fabulous Getty Museum overlooking the city. Admire the wonderful architecture of Richard Meier and stroll through the beautiful gardens designed by Robert Irwin. The museum consists of five pavilions housing changing exhibitions, the permanent collection of paintings, sculpture, decorative arts and photographs. The van will leave the Hilton Hotel at 10 AM. You will be free to explore the museum and grounds at your leisure and have lunch when you want in the Café, the Restaurant or the Garden Terrace Cafeteria. The van will depart the museum at 3 PM so that you will be back at the Hotel before 4 PM.

Tickets for the event are $25.00, which covers the cost of transportation from the Hilton and admission to the Museum. They can be purchased using the registration form on the back of this brochure. If space is available, they will also be for sale at the Registration Desk.

For additional information contact Mary Casillas at 818.706.4538 or casillas.mary@littonisd.com
